Q. What does Sholes Miller Rodriguez & Brown, PLLC do?

A. We help people resolve their problems. We have a wide-ranging scope of practice areas among the firm’s attorneys. Some of what we do includes the following:

- We represent clients in court, defending them in lawsuits or against criminal charges.
- We file lawsuits for clients.
- We prepare and probate wills.
- We negotiate contracts.
- We assist with employment and construction agreements.

We will refer clients to other attorneys when we think that may be the best solution.

Q. What distinguishes Sholes Miller Rodriguez & Brown, PLLC from other law firms?

A. We have extensive experience in matters involving health and medicine, including catastrophic accidents, Mental Hygiene Law proceedings, and personal injury. There are no inexperienced attorneys at our firm. The least experienced attorney has been practicing law for 15 years.

Q. Explain how Sholes Miller Rodriguez & Brown, PLLC can provide legal assistance to those in the medical field.

A. We defend clients against medical malpractice lawsuits, and we advise, represent, and defend physicians, surgeons, nurses, and other licensed health professionals in disciplinary proceedings at the NYS Office of Professional Medical Conduct (OPMC), the NYS Education Department Office of Professional Discipline, and other administrative proceedings.

Because we represent physicians, hospitals, nursing homes, and other licensed health professionals, it has been extremely helpful that Robert Irving Miller is a registered nurse and former hospital and nursing home administrator. Robert’s significant clinical experience as a nurse on ambulances, in emergency rooms, and in ICUs allows him to analyze medical issues from a particularly useful perspective.

Q. What is one of the firm’s memorable cases and why?

A. Robert Miller won a verdict for more than $5.4 million at trial for a client who had been shot while trying to defend a friend.
